Launching the new service, Airporter director Niall McKeever said: "It's a very exciting time for our company. We have just replaced the fleet this year and having internet connectivity on our entire fleet introduces a technology platform on which we can build new and innovative services that not only benefit our passengers but also improve the way our fleet operates".

'We are always looking for new ways to improve our service and Internet access was a natural choice for us, so that passengers can make the most of their travel time. For people who travel for work and business this new service could add three or four hours back into their working week.'

"Time Flies for Airporter Passengers"

Airporter Trials of the FREE WiFi service has shown a very positive response from those who have used it. Over the six week trial period over 1,000 passengers logged on to the service. Passengers who used the service commented on the following ...

"its a fantastic opportunity to continue working and making the most of the transfer time" ...

"now I can shop and browse the internet whilst making the journey to airport" ...

"Airporter now make time fly!" ...

Fleet Connect

Airporter have teamed up with a Dublin company called Fleet Connect who have provided the technical expertise to make the free wifi access possible.
